Linda Andrews lives in Phoenix, Arizona with her husband, three children and a menagerie of domesticated animals. While she started writing a decade ago, she always used her stories to escape the redundancy of her day job as a scientist and never thought to actually combine her love of fiction and science. DOH! After that Homer Simpson moment, she allowed the two halves of her brain to talk to ...

"Redaction: The Meltdown" is a wonderful continuation of the story Ms Andrews started in book one of this series. Unlike a lot of apocalyptic fiction I've read, this series follows a sequence of events which could be very real. The characters introduced in the first book are, in this book, shown to progress through their grief and fears so that they band more tightly together in order to ...

REDACTION by Linda Andrews gave me the chills. She's crafted a scary, well-told tale of what "will" happen to our world "when" the next pandemic hits. Ms Andrews' story jumps in just as people believe the worst of the pandemic, that's killed over thirty percent of the people infected, is over. How wrong they are.
